Painter Harvey Quaytman was a bit of a historical outlier. While many artists were trying to grapple with the legacies of Pop, Minimalism, and Conceptualism after the 1960s, Quaytman was making canvases that distilled the lessons of high modernism, via Malevich, Arp, or Mondrian. The nine canvases on view at Van Doren Waxter, made between 1982 and 1990, are as beautiful as they are rigorous, and look fresher than ever.
